

Abstract

A method of centralised data position information and storage and utilisation comprising the steps of arranging a byte stream of data into partitioned logical data, storing data position information relating to the logical data in a reserve storage area, transferring the information from the reserve storage area to a centralised storage area configured to store information relating to substantially all the partitioned logical data and utilising the information to locate a target data using a search algorithm.

10